Response to the consultation

The proposed national identity database is intrusive and unfocused. It appears to make personal information available to a large number of bodies for no very good reason at a very high cost to individual privacy. It might be bureaucratically convenient but it will unacceptably facilitate surveillance. This proposal must be reconsidered and must not be implemented without full public scrutiny and new primary legislation.

Yours sincerely,